It provides tools for basic image retouching and scanning, color correction, cataloging and editing, and product photo marketing. It includes a library management feature, which you can use to organize photos into folders and subfolders for efficient storage and searching. And, of course, it's got a built-in cataloging and display engine, just like all the other Adobe products do.

Q: How do you add members to an existing.env file? I'd like to add some variables to an existing.env file. So for example, I have a.env file that looks like this: `ROOT=../ BASE=../$ROOT` And I've added an environment variable to it like this: `BASE=../$ROOT/` However, it seems to ignore this environment variable. Can anyone help please? A: Please note that.env file can be created when you use Flyway command. So, if you use it from time to time, you may forget adding new variables, and you will only be able to see ones, which was created during the last command invocation. So, to be able to add new variables in existing.env file, you can only add them to the flyway.properties file which is generated when you run your first flyway command. If you want to add new variable to the existing.env file, you need to generate flyway properties from the last existing one, using command like this: `mvn flyway:generate-resource` In this case, the flyway.properties file will be created in the root folder of your project, with variables from the last.env file. So, you only need to add new variable to the flyway.properties file
