Articular disc cells were used as an alternative to chondrocytes in tissue engineering of articular cartilage. In this study, the authors describe methods for isolating articular disc-like cells and for studying their differentiation in three-dimensional (3-D) culture. When four days old embryonic chick articular disc-like cells were treated with a hormone mix including insulin-like growth factor-I (IGF-I), epidermal growth factor (EGF), and bone morphogenetic protein-2 (BMP-2), the cells became attached to three-dimensional collagen fibril scaffolds in 24 h. The disc-like cells proliferated into the scaffolds and differentiated into chondrocytes. The cells had cartilage-specific genes such as type II collagen, aggrecan, and type IX collagen and were hypervascularized in 3-D culture. These findings suggest that disc-like cells can be used as an alternative to chondrocytes for producing cartilage tissue.
