Adding tabs to lists in the Columns UI. ☑ Columns UI = gui... Copy of Archaeologists in China have made a major discovery in a tomb dating back 3,000 years, five years after a group claimed to have discovered the tomb in the Xinjiang region. Scientists were "amazed" to find the tomb in Turpan, Xinjiang, the Xinhua News Agency said. The team has found a "unique and diverse variety of pottery, horses, knives, flutes, a shield, and lances that suggest the tomb belonged to a rich person or family", said Yu Xingqing, head of the archaeology team that found the tomb. In September 2008, a team of experts said they discovered a mummified body in a long-sealed imperial tomb in Turpan. While it had been known that the ancient Han Chinese had settled in the Tarim Basin, archaeologists did not know the location of their capital. In September 2008, Chinese archaeologists announced they had discovered a "dazzling" 3,000-year-old tomb in Tarim, Xinjiang. A mummified body was found in a wooden coffin with horse-drawn chariots and weapons, including pikes, spears and daggers as well as a shield. The team has named their find "Daya" or "days". The tomb is filled with pottery vessels, animal and human bones, stones, wax and even silk. "What is especially amazing is the diversity of the culture represented in the tomb. The tomb has a unique and diverse variety of pottery, horses, knives, flutes, a shield, and lances that suggest the tomb belonged to a rich person or family", said Yu Xingqing, head of the archaeology team. "People of different cultures were living in the same area," Yu added. Another significant find made by the Chinese is the discovery of copper and bronze copper and bronze instruments. It also had a silk ribbon for wrapping the body's hair. Yu said copper objects include metal collars and other objects that can be used for ceremonies. He said it is possible that Daya was a rich man because of the luxury items in the tomb. "A dagger with a gold handle was used for hunting during the time of Daya, and it would
