I am trying to randomly create a list and the code below takes some time to loop. It is creating a list with 1000 random items to which some funtion is applied later. Any help or idea will be appreciated. import random int = 1000 def fun(x): return x for x in range(int): mylist = list(random.sample(x, int)) mylist.sort() mylist.reverse() print(mylist) A: You are generating a list of size 1000, then sorting it, then doing a reverse shuffle. This is a lot of operations, all in a tight loop. What are you really trying to do? What are the steps you are performing? A: You are doing a lot of work (adding 1000 items to a list; sorting and reversing that
