Other Games Another instance of the Minion management video game series about falling into debt to a corporation and getting enslaved by them (the name being a subtle reference to the minions of the titular character) where the player has to manage his minions' work to make a profit. In Day of the Tentacles, the Kz-Management theme is used in the emergency call box "Incoming" in the German radio station. In Xenosaga Episode I: Der Wille zur Macht, there is a KZ Office where the player enters into a sub-red zone and is presented with several choices. See also KZ-Management KZ-Management 2 KZ-

I want to use the Google Chart API to display this data in a graph, with a menu on the right side to select the region the data covers. For example, if I have in this collection cities A, B, C and D, with regions R1, R2, R3, R4, I'd like to have a menu with the items {A:R1, B:R2, C:R3, D:R4}, so that the user sees only the items relevant to the city he is viewing. Is it possible? I tried to add a "tooltip" in my options, but since the options are passed to the chart as an array, the client-side variable has been lost. A: You can use the array of data table for this, I've used it myself and it can be a bit tricky (I found it a bit hard when writing the code for the first time), however once you understand it it can be very useful, as I've shown in this example: `google.charts.load('current', { callback: function () { var data = new google.visualization.DataTable(); data.addColumn('string', 'City'); data.addColumn('number', 'Total');`
