Adobe Photoshop Express is a

web-based tool that allows anyone with a web browser to create and edit photos, images, video, GIFs and web galleries, and more. A former Microsoft employee has introduced the world's first standalone Facebook-style app to open up the social networking site to a new type of user. While the app has been designed for Android tablets, the maker says the Facebook for Android app, which is available in the Google Play store, is built on the same platform as the iPhone and Windows Mobile versions. The Facebook for Android app is available free to download and use, but users may need to provide a Facebook login, said the developer, who did not want to be named. "Facebook is a very big platform and the main reason why this exists is to open it up," the developer told Sky News. "We've built it to be totally Facebook-native. Everything is from Facebook, it's how the platform is designed. "It's the first completely Facebook-native Facebook client." Facebook first forked the service in a development that has puzzled some of the users who are opposed to being locked into Facebook, the developer said. "The first iteration was a near total rewrite of the Facebook platform - the login, the news feed, the message system," he said. "We're using the same codebase and same Facebook platform technology that's out there." The app features include social networking - including photo sharing, private photo albums and "tagging" - as well as commenting on posts and comments, he said. It also has options for sending invitations to friends, "like" posts and "re-share" them. The app also includes tools for managing users' news feed - including highlighting and hiding the apps they use from the News Feed. The service has two versions: free - which only includes the basic features - and a "premium" version, which includes more features. The developer claims the service is "better than Facebook for Windows Phone", with all of the features, including "like" posts, private photo albums, commenting, and photo sharing, as well as integration with Facebook-owned services including Instagram, WhatsApp and Messenger. A free version of the app will also be launched for Android tablets and the developer hopes to bring the app to iPhone "in a couple of months". But, the app will have limitations - 388ed7b0c7

---
