injured, Cambodian Prime Minister Hun Sen has responded with an army-backed crackdown, rounding up and detaining scores of suspects. On Monday, thousands of protesters gathered outside a prominent evangelical Christian church in the capital Phnom Penh, where opposition leaders had planned to deliver the speeches that would later draw thousands more, leading to clashes and gunfire between protesters and the authorities. But just as the protest seemed to be entering into full swing, the Cambodian army suddenly began dispersing it, detaining scores of people and then releasing them to a sea of journalists and cameras. More than 100 people were reported arrested by the police, who handed them over to the army. Those detained were accused of "inciting public disorder." On Tuesday, a military judge approved the arrest of 30 persons who are to be held for seven days. Hours after the shootings, Cambodia's ruling party officially blamed "outside forces" for the
