This procedurally generated maze is inspired by Madness Road, the original title in Big Robot Games' flagship game Fragments. In its own right, the procedural maze is a game all on its own; by combining the secret maze mechanics with the traditional classic demons vs. player, chaotic fun ensues. The labyrinthine mazes are procedurally generated so every time you play you will have a unique experience. The mechanics were also generated using a unique randomization process inspired by roguelikes. Keyboard/mouse controls (1 = right click, 2 = left click) Keyboard only play/pause controls The Succubi Trap utilizes an experimental mouse-pad mechanic to work as a side-scrolling 2D arcade game within a maze. The player begins in the middle of the maze and must navigate all the way to the end. The sides of the maze are populated with tiles and doors that are procedurally generated at the beginning of each maze and if you touch a door it will open. The player can choose to open a door, but if they choose to do so they will not know what's on the other side. The game ends in a self-contained chamber the same as the one you begin in. Multiple options are offered to reach your end goal. The trap is designed to be a test of your skills and insight with no real strategy or tactics required. The initial maze-generator is chaotic and in a sense "open-ended" for the player to get caught in local minima where they eventually become stuck. KEY FEATURES Maze: Each time you play a new maze will have a different layout and design. It will be procedurally generated for better replayability. One-time-use locks: Using the model a simple gridded lock was used to lock/unlock sections of the map. Openings to the end goal chamber are also locked so players can not choose to "skip" to the end goal directly. Power Ups: To escape the maze players need to use their limited supply of juice by turning on power ups such as drains to trail and power ups that are triggered by rolling dice. Dice: Players have to roll the dice to activate a power up. Rolls are used to reset the maze from the start, or to enter a chamber. Dice Pad: To enter a new chamber the player must use the mouse and click a hole on the dice pad to "fuse" with the next
