What's new:

Disposable Heroes Soundtrack is the fourth studio album by the American punk band Blink-182. It was released on October 27, 1995, by MCA Records. Unlike their previous albums, it does not feature founding member Tom DeLonge, who was fired from the band after the recording. Disposable Heroes was the highest-charting studio album released by the band, reaching number one in several countries (including Canada, Australia, Europe, and the United Kingdom). It had also brought a change in their sound, showcasing a more rock-based sound with heavier guitars, more aggressive lyrics, and more upbeat music. The album also spawned four international number-one singles: "Wasting My Time", "All the Small Things", "What's My Age Again?", and "All the Small Things (Reprise)". The album was awarded a platinum certification in Canada in 2016, denoting sales of over 100,000 units. Background After being sent their debut 7" single, "She's Out of Control", which received radio and club play on Top 40 formats, Blink-182 was eager to play a bigger stage. The band went on a tour in the United States for the first time in their career, with The Offspring opening up for them. After two more months of touring, Mark Hoppus and Travis Barker left the band to pursue their musical career. Due to scheduling conflicts, the band had to refuse to play on that year's Lollapalooza tour; instead, it was Tom DeLonge and bassist Mark Hoppus who were replaced by Alkaline Trio's Matt Skiba and Chris Potts, respectively. After the tour was finished, the band started the recording process of their second album, Enema of the State, with producer Ryan Adams. It wasn't until January 1995, by which time their original drummer Joe Salmins had joined The Offspring, that the album was recorded. The band had previously stated that they didn't even want a bassist, but DeLonge insisted that Hoppus do it to fulfill the obligation of the punk scene. After their previous bassist, Barker, had been told to not tell anyone about anything, he was required to keep all the information under wraps. In his first session of recording the album, Hoppus received information from him about the songwriting process and song arrangements, but he wasn't welcome to tell anyone about it. This resulted in the fact that upon recording, Hoppus
