* Elements (more on this later in this chapter) offers an offline version of Photoshop, so you can use Photoshop without loading it into your computer. To prepare the image for selection, Figure 9-2 shows the initial image (left). This image is the result of running the quick fix on a handful of photos. Here, I've made a modest edit, but a more thorough edit would have included removing the bright yellow flowers and replacing them with a background image. FIGURE 9-2: This photo shows the editing tools and some of the types of layers available in Photoshop. You can also use Photoshop's features to produce extra-impressive images, so for example, rather than just editing the photo in Figure 9-2, I went into the Spots & Grime filter, found the filter I wanted, and applied it to the image to create the final image (right). The only problem is that the progress of the filter isn't automatically reflected in the image editing window. So I also had to use

Adobe's free document-saving feature to make sure the image was saved. 2. \*\*With the image still selected, choose Filter\*\*  $\Rightarrow$  \*\*Blur\*\*  $\Rightarrow$  \*\*Gaussian Blur\*\* (see Figure 9-3). This command creates a Gaussian blur on the image. You'll probably use a setting of 3 pixels or so to soften the edges of the image, but these are just guidelines because with this kind of editing tool, it's easy to create images that look jarringly different as soon as you step away from the image editing tool. You can control the distance at which the blur effect works by adjusting the Radius slider (refer to Figure 9-3, or use the Slider bar). FIGURE 9-3: This Blur filter makes your subject pop, depending on your settings. If you prefer, you can apply the Blur filter to the entire photo by pressing Shift+Ctrl+E.

3. **Using the Brush tool, paint on the image with black paint to outline the subject, as shown in Figure 9-4**. For my example, I used a small, soft, watercolor brush. FIGURE 9-4: This is what the image looks like if you apply the Gaussian Blur filter and then remove some of the paint with the Eraser tool. Using the Eraser tool, erase any unwanted areas of

Q: Vim syntax highlighting support/mixin/bookmark for chinese/korean/japanese? I'm compiling a vim color scheme, specifically I'm looking to use the IniMixin class. This is based on a theme.vim script (thanks to the original author John Gozde): Here is the context: I was wondering if I have to implement support to some kind of mixin, however I can't find anything. I know Vim can highlight Japanese through the japanese filetype plugin, but it doesn't seem to be using it for some reason. So, I was wondering if anyone had experience using any language-specific mixins (Chinese/Korean/Japanese) in my color scheme, and if it's working fine? This is the line that I'm using for the IniMixin class, based on the context above.

You can try things like: If you want to highlight only comments, then you will use: if arg =~# '^#.$' && arg =~# '^\\s$' hi Comment ctermfg=243 endif If you want to highlight only statements, then you will use: if arg =~# '^#.$' || arg =~# '^\\s
