On the contrary, the world is a more dangerous place than it was in the 1970s. The causes of war deaths in world wars I and II were completely different from the causes of war deaths in recent wars, but we now face new challenges in terms of the level of violence. The world today faces a new generation of organized mass murderers. A new breed of "Knights Templar" arises, armed with biological weapons, guided missile-platforms, sophisticated information technology, and a determination to achieve their goal no matter what the cost. The average life expectancy of a person born in the early 1970s in Iraq is now under 33 years. Children in Afghanistan today are expected to spend more than half of their lives without the benefit of immunization. The people of this generation are growing up in a world where a significant percentage are going to die from war and violence. When you consider the cost of assembling, maintaining, and operating a self
