Automatic Detection of Retinopathy Using Vision Restoration and Local Binary Pattern to Feature Extraction. Retinopathy is the most common diabetic complication, and early detection of retinopathy is the key to preventing blindness. With recent advances in computer vision, deep learning has shown great potential in images classification. However, retinopathy detection is a challenging problem where only few real images are available. In this paper, we proposed a method to automatically detect the retinopathy from a single fundus image, based on a deep recurrent self-focused attention convolutional neural network (RSS-CNN). In addition, we raised a novel idea to pair the single fundus image into two or three distinct retinal images to local maximum pooling of oriented gradient. After that, based on a local binary pattern, the binary connectedness was used to extract the second-order texture

Tumor suppressor p53 and proliferative stress: A dynamic view. The tumor suppressor p53 is a master regulator of cell cycle arrest and apoptosis. Depending on the cellular and environmental milieu, p53 can act as a guardian of the genome and protect cells against different stresses, which include a variety of intrinsic stressors (DNA-damaging agents, hypoxia, telomere loss and uncapped telomeres) and extrinsic stressors (oncogene activation, loss of cell adhesion and tissue injury). This observation, along with the essential role of p53 in the maintenance of genomic integrity and homeostasis, has strongly suggested that the loss of p53 activity promotes tumor development. In this review, we will discuss how p53 is stabilized in response to oncogenic stress and how this prevents cellular transformation; the most critical event is the accumulation of p53 protein levels. A subsequent review will address the role of p53 in cellular responses to the aforementioned intrinsic stressors, while a third section will deal with how p53 can stabilize the genome following DNA damage and the underlying mechanisms for this process. Finally, we will propose a model for the role of p53 in cellular responses to extrinsic stressors in cancer.... of merriment and reality to a trio of Southern
