The present invention relates to an electrical connector assembly and, more particularly, to an electrical connector assembly having a jack socket that mounts in an opening of a panel or chassis. The connectors used for interconnecting electronic devices, for example computers, or between computers and other devices require a high level of electrical performance. The connectors must provide reliable, high speed signals and isolation between the signal contacts and the signal transmission media, typically flexible cables. The connector and its mating contacts should exhibit a high yield of electrical performance and an extremely low rate of electrical failure. The rate of electrical failure of a connector assembly as used in an electronic device should be no greater than about 1 failure in 100,000 electrical connections. Electrical connectors may be mounted to a surface of a substrate, such as a printed circuit board, by using connector assemblies or jack sockets. These connector assemblies may be mounted within an opening of a chassis, box, panel, or other surface of the substrate. The jack socket has a jack receptacle or socket end that receives the connector when it is mated with the jack socket. The socket end of the jack socket may also include a shell, a strain relief clamp, or other features for protecting the socket end of the jack socket. U.S. Pat. No. 5,971,985 discloses a high speed connector assembly comprising a jack socket which has a shell enclosing an opening to receive a connector. The jack socket includes a strain relief clamp to provide force fit and axial retention of the jack socket to the connector and to the surface of the substrate on which the connector is mounted. Connectors are also used in the medical field where it is desirable to provide a sterilized environment to the health care providers and to the equipment used in hospitals. In the medical field, connectors are used, for example, to connect a disposable catheter to a reusable medication injector. These connectors

(so if you are for some reason under age 15) For a brief moment, this is where Ruby and Weiss crashed. A dozen credits later, they found themselves in a car headed... to the nearby town of Oberon. The town was little more than a cluster of four- or five-story houses with a few streets. It reminded Ruby of Beacon. A town like Beacon. Only, there were no buildings as tall as those there. And the houses were all at least forty-feet tall. A craggy rubble... when they turned onto the small town's main street, they saw a footpath leading up. Ruby looked at her friend at once seeing the small pretty smile that crossed Weiss's little gapped-teeth. The white-furred girl beckoned Ruby to walk into the path and in a quiet voice, she asked, "What do you think, Ruby? My mother planned everything. She found me a new pair of car that you can style. You didn't by any chance tell her you might like that?" It was as if she held a secret. The too-cool-to-care aura was no doubt apparent on her face. Ruby's heart skipped a few beat. Weiss was quietly amused at her friend. She made her change her tone to playful. "Nah, Ruby, I didn't because I meant to tell her about the dress. But I didn't, 'cause I want to make sure I return with it back on!" Ruby froze. Weiss was teasing her. But the too-cool-to-care aura faded, and what she was teasing her little sister became devastatingly intense. She chuckled. Then she quickly turned her infatuated laughter into a cold and hard glint of a stare. Ruby really didn't know what Weiss did about Ruby... but when she realized it
