Game Video: FIFA, The Game of Football The Details FIFA's player ratings have been overhauled in FIFA 22. The ratings now affect what you can unlock or build in a Create-a-Player. In addition, FIFA player ratings are now out of a 3.0 to 7.0 scale rather than a simple 1 to 10. The graphics of faces have been upgraded, and feature-for-feature, the game is similar to last year's edition of FIFA. Player Ratings The new player ratings work differently than before. Rather than having a fixed range for ratings, the range now varies depending on how many times a player has been rated. For example, if you have rated a player 20 times, the rating will be in a 5.0-7.0 range. If you have rated the player 10 times, the rating will be 1-4.0 range. The Move Up and Move Down buttons have been slightly rearranged and also include a Move to Top and Move to Bottom capability. Create-A-Player Create-a-Player is the "Create an All-New Character" feature. There are roughly 22 different "vectors" which impact what kinds of behaviors you can or can't have in a player. To allow for a level playing field, there are different vectors which are defined by the popularity of the player and/or how historically valuable the player is. For example, there may be a vector which can have make-up items as their customization. Another vector could be more of a physical creator as they can have a variety of shapes, with some stats associated with it. In this case, a more talented player with a three-meter wingspan will have three-meter wingspan regardless of the vector. There are also numeric ranges for ratings within each vector, so it's possible to create an extremely talented player who is highly rated (e.g., seven or eight in a vector). This is a feature that will enable players to create a character that is highly talented in a particular area without achieving anything they would have been unable to achieve with a more basic character. Player Traits From a gameplay perspective, there are 11 different traits which can be unique to each of the player's created characters. Those traits are divided into three categories: physical, mental and behavior. Physical traits includes Speed, Strength, Technique
