This motion capture data is used to develop new animations and player models for these actions. With over a year of additional physics and tuning, the team at EA Canada has included more accurate collision, deceleration, spatial awareness and more to challenge players from start to finish. Players will feel more realistic and agile during gameplay. FIFA is more than just a video game. The development team, headed up by FIFA Development Manager David Rutter, has worked tirelessly to breathe new life into the FIFA series with new visual effects, new animations and a stunning audio-visual experience on PlayStation 4. We captured over 2,000 full-body shots – including full runs and tackles – and we were able to recreate and modify every single detail of the player's movement, to take into account the physical attributes of a top player. "With 'HyperMotion Technology,' we're able to deliver real-world player movements across a variety of scenarios such as shooting, crossing and making runs, in full HD 1080p, on PlayStation 4. We also created custom player models and animations for real-life scenarios, such as tackling, recoveries, sprints, fake shots and goal kicks." "One of the other key challenges we faced was creating the process to record the entire game, including all the extra features included in FIFA 22. We worked closely with our partners at Rodeo FX, the creators of the
