Hotfix is a solo indie game for Windows. It was inspired by the sandbox nature of the Minecraft and Enter the Gungeon games. Wanting to push the genre forward, I decided to completely break away from the top-down shooter mechanics and adopt a complete different structure that also pushes away from the minimalist style of other games in the genre. Using that structure, you can build your own world - near infinite - and create your own play experience. There are different biomes available and the environment changes depending on the time of day. All structures generated are built at random, creating completely unique and randomly generated experiences. With Hotfix, you start with nothing and need to gather resources in order to create your own town and build up your base. You can use two different mechanics for gathering these resources. One is manually harvesting the resources you find in your travels, and the other is planting crops on your farmland and raising animals to be able to trade for other resources. As the game is inspired by Enter the Gungeon and Minecraft, there are two bosses who spawn at night. They are the bosses of the game - they generate a different set of biomes on a daily basis and are completely randomized. So you can even generate different landscapes for them. While you can fight them, the objective of the game is not to defeat them, but to tear down their structures and kill their generators, destroy their base, and restore the original landscape to its original state. In the future, I plan to add more bosses. To survive, you need to generate enough food and meat to feed yourself as well as a dog, and craft weapons to tear down and kill the enemies and robots that spawn during the night. The game has three different ways to craft weapons. They are: Absinthe Handgun Plumber Bomb Phosphate Grenade Launcher You can also craft armor and clothing items. However, the building blocks for all items can be found in the world. They spawn in their respective biomes. To make your base more secure and defend yourself against enemy invaders, you can build armor, windows, doors, and walls that will generate sentry bots that can fight for you. I have created new content every month since Hotfix has been released. While Hotfix is still an independent game that will likely never reach an actual commercial release, I am open to supporting it and adding new content. I want to add more content to the game because I love creating it. I am passionate about this project, I love

All-Star Graphics (and a New Friend): - Levar Burton, the original hand-drawn grey man in "Frankenstein" - New retro-style hand-drawn character graphics in "Attack of the Mutant" - New Retro-style hand-drawn character graphics in "Attack of the Mutant" - Artwork by the original illustrator of the original Grey Man in Monsterland and Frankenstein. Great Gameplay: - A unique new procedural generation system for each time you play, making each experience unique. - Robust enemy A.I. (See A.I. Example below) - Adventure and Side-Scrolling elements - Difficulty levels and special levels! - Great Leaderboard rankings - Randomly generated monsters. - Rewards for different behaviors, such as; "civilized" or "Kraut-Killer!" Minimal HUD: - Out of sight, out of mind. - No yelps, no beeps. - No ugly buttons or mechanics. Complex, Steep Puzzle: - A massive and complex puzzle system that allows you to kill the beast, with a variety of different approaches. A.I. Example: You have the sword and shield, and the other guy has a big gun. You reach in your backpack and load your robot fist. You get ready to fight and about to swing that sword. The other guy comes over and he sees that you are charging down with your robot fist. So, instead of fighting, he pulls out his shotgun and shoots you up into the air. You then loop around and come back down and land on his big robot hand. You grab him and try to drag him away to your camp. You are doing a pretty good job and get almost there, when the other guy snaps his hand back and tries to pull you in. You fall off and hit the ground, and the next thing you know, he has your backpack and is running away. On the way to his camp, you get shot up into the air by his giant robot-gun, you land back down at his camp and he grabs your backpack and runs away. What happened? You fell off the rope and got shot into the air, looped around the hand, got kicked off and then got shot into the air again, then looped around the hand and was kicked off again. It was an interesting move, but it didn't work. Did you land on the ground? If you c9d1549cdd makes the world's only known full-body tissue-based NIKA camera completely noninvasive! Why do facial cameras need to use lasers to create real images of your features when they can be based on your own flesh and blood? Join me for a tour around the forbidden world of full-body NIKA's as I discuss just that! And if you're ready for more, I go on an absolutely outrageous journey around New Zealand to collect more information on tissue density and detect my body in the wild. As always, there are a ton of naughty comments and questions from fans of all sizes, so be sure to read those as well! Show Notes Stats! I was this close to packing away my Gabblette and riding a one-woman initiative to the next party - New Zealand is apparently quite cold! My teammates (and my It's Ok to Like Catch Phrase) recorded time activity and sleep data on my trip. I feel the rush of getting to know the new technology of sleep here, but don't plan to start testing my limits tonight - I need to rest! Bad thing the next with last of the ultrasound truck is almost sold out, so I've accepted an offer on a house last minute. This is good because it means we can start clearing out a few of my storage problems and I don't have to figure out exactly what to do with a ton of building security uniforms! As always, statistical data about the last episode can be found on the show page at Thanks again to our patrons on Patreon for helping this show be possible! You guys are the best!
