[Substrates of neuronal nitric oxide synthase (NOS) in the rat trigeminal ganglion and their potential for nitric oxide-related disorders]. To identify the substrates of the neuronal nitric oxide synthase (NOS) in the rat trigeminal ganglion (TG) and to evaluate the nitric oxide (NO)-related disorders in different lesions of the TG. Immunocytochemistry with nicotinamide-adenine dinucleotide phosphate (NADPH) histochemical technique, and immunoblotting were used to analyze the substrates of the NOS in the rat TG. Immunocytochemistry with NADPH histochemistry and Western blot indicated that the NOS was present in TG neurons and that it produced NO. Ligation of the ophthalmic branch of the trigeminal nerve induced lower and longer nerve action potential. Intraperitoneal administration of Nomega-nitro-L-arginine methyl ester (L-NAME) suppressed the amplitude of the nerve action potential (10 mmol/L, 2.0 mg/mL). Decreases in L-arginine (75 mg/mL, 5.0 mmol) attenuated the L-NAME effect. The NOS of the TG neurons, the endothelial NOS (eNOS) in the trigeminal vessels, and the constitutive NOS (cNOS) of the TG neurons themselves are all involved in the production of NO. NO-related disorders in different lesions of the TG may be attributed to decreased NO concentrations in the satellite glial cells (SGCs).

Phenolics from Crataegus pinnatifida Suppress Atherosclerosis via Apoptosis of Macrophages and Monocytes. Crataegus pinnatifida is a plant used as a traditional medicine for the treatment of various illnesses, including atherosclerosis. In this study, we investigated the antithrombotic and anti-atherogenic effects of the ethanolic extracts of C. pinnatifida leaves (CPL) on the formation of platelet-derived thrombi and atherogenic plaques in rabbits and hypercholesterolemic rats. The chemical compositions of CPL were determined by HPLC, and major constituents were identified using LC-MS and NMR. In vitro experiments were used to confirm that phenolics from CPL prevented the formation of thrombi via the inhibition of thrombin-induced platelet aggregation, adhesion to fibrinogen-coated surfaces and activation of ADP-activated platelets. The HPLC analysis of isolated polyphenolics showed an abundance of hydroxycinnamic acids in CPL. Furthermore, among the hydroxycinnamic acid derivatives in CPL, salvianolic acid B was the most abundant compound, and isorhamnetin was the second most abundant compound in CPL. Salvianolic acid B suppressed the formation of macrophage-derived foam cells in the presence of oxidized low-density lipoprotein (Ox-LDL) in THP-1 cells. The development of atherosclerotic lesions was significantly inhibited in rabbits fed a high-cholesterol diet when treated with CPL. In addition, CPL significantly suppressed the differentiation of monocytes into foam cells. Thus, the results indicate that CPL possessed antithrombotic and anti-atherogenic properties in vivo. These results suggest that the phenolics from CPL could be a potential source of alternative phytochemicals for the prevention or treatment of cardiovascular disease. As most of us have experienced, inside a small space, light is one of the greatest assets. This is one reason why designs for modern kitchens with space constraints have been traditionally focused on designing an open kitchen. Today the lighting fixtures that define the middle decades of the 20th century have been replaced by functional wall sconces and more recently with open light kits with LED lighting. The designers and planners of kitchens have had to create nooks and corners to house the light fixture and lamp that is on top of the counter
