So I changed it to: struct ListElement { char *data; struct ListElement *next; } And I changed the whole: struct List *head; To: struct ListElement *head; But it still doesn't work. Could you guys please help? Thank you. A: You have to use the malloc() function to create the dynamically allocated memory. Something like, head = malloc(sizeof(ListElement)); A: struct ListElement has no default constructor. That's why, trying to create a list element: ListElement *tmp = malloc(sizeof(ListElement)); allocate memory for a list element: ListElement *tmp = malloc(sizeof(ListElement)); on a struct that has no default constructor produces undefined behavior, and probably a segmentation fault. It should be struct ListElement { char *data; struct ListElement *next; ListElement(char *data) : data(data), next(NULL) { } } struct ListElement *tmp = malloc(sizeof(ListElement)); tmp->data = data; tmp->next = NULL; A: you forgot to initialize the head: head = malloc(sizeof(ListElement)); You have to put a valid data inside. If you want to make a dynamic list: Add this to the end of the list struct ListElement 648931e174
