Why is.french-french's configuration file locked? For all other languages, I can edit and save configuration files with no problems, but I can't edit this one. A: I wasn't being asked for permission, but when I reloaded the app the locks disappeared. Thanks to @baptiste for his suggestion. A: The.french-french file is locked for direct editing in case you use the French localization of the application. The French localization does not provide additional resources for editing but creates a separate French version of the application with a localized configuration. Open the.fr-FR resource group in the ~/Resources folder. In the Localizable.strings file in the root of this group, you can only change the value of the keys that are also defined in the base.french-french file. If you want to change values that are not already defined in the base.french-french file, you should create a new file with your desired values using a different resource group. Resource groups can have subgroups that contain their own localizations and this is where you can create your own French resource file. Create a new resource group for your app named.fr-FR. Create a new French version of your app with the.fr-FR resource group Change the values you want to change in the.fr-FR resource group to whatever you want. Restart the iOS simulator and run the app to see if it works. What are the symptoms of venous insufficiency?
