Effect of exogenous adenosine on cerebral ischemia in the rat. A possible role of adenosine as an endogenous cardioprotective substance has been suggested. To examine the potential role of this nucleoside in brain ischemia, we administered exogenous adenosine to cerebral ischemic rats. After a 3-min occlusion of the middle cerebral artery, intracerebroventricular (i.c.v.) administration of adenosine (10 micrograms) significantly reduced the size of infarction. Adenosine infusion after 12 min of middle cerebral artery occlusion reduced the infarction up to 60% when administered in a dose of 20 micrograms. Intracerebroventricular administration of beta-cytosine arabinoside (100 micrograms) completely abolished the protective effects of adenosine (20 micrograms). The protective effects of adenosine (20 micrograms) were not blocked by DPCPX (300 micrograms), indicating that the receptor involved in this adenosine effect on ischemic damage is not the A1 receptor. However, DPCPX (300 micrograms) partially blocked the adenosine-induced cardioprotection. These results suggest that adenosine protects cerebral ischemic injury via its interaction with different adenosine receptors. US to send 250 troops to Iraq By By COMMENTS Share COMMENTS Related Content US troops will begin arriving in Iraq before the end of 2008 to combat the increasing strength of al-Qaeda in the region. President George W. Bush made the announcement in a Rose Garden speech on Tuesday, in which he condemned the violence of terrorist militias in Iraq as an attack on "the very foundations of freedom and democracy". However, he said American troops would be working side by side with Iraqi forces. "Iraq will not be able to defeat al-Qaeda and the Islamic State of Iraq, and Syria, on its own," Bush said. "To defeat them, we must have the Iraqi people stand up against their own enemy. We can only defeat them by helping the Iraqi people do what they have to do." The White House said the first 250 troops, which will be based at a US airbase in northern Iraq, would start to arrive there as early as next month. The remaining US troops, numbering an estimated 150,000, would begin arriving
