Designed by Photoshop veterans Many of the features in Photoshop and Adobe Photoshop Elements have been made by Photoshop veterans who needed them. The aim of the project is to move the company into other product segments in the future. How to use Photoshop Elements Launch the software and click on the new icon that you see on the left side of the window. You have to create your account if you don't have one. Click on "Create account" and follow the steps to create your Adobe ID. Once you have your account, you have to configure your preferences for the product. You have to choose your language, your country and your time zone. It's a good idea to save your account settings. The "Preferences" window will pop up. Click on "Save" on the top right of the window to save your settings. Installing the software is as simple as that. Next, you have to choose the web browser you want to use 05a7%cecff

Q: Bootstrap 3 and Rails 4: make collabpanel style navbar bigger In my app, we use Bootstrap3 for all the stuff (login page, forgotten password...). I'd like to change some parts, for now I just want to make the navbar bigger. I tried: @navbar-inverse-bg: #565A61; @navbar-inverse-color: #FFFFFF; @navbar-inverse-border: #555753; @navbar-inverse-link-active-bg: #3690E1; @navbar-inverse-link-active-color: #FFFFFF; @navbar-inverse-link-hover-color: #FFFFFF; @navbar-inverse-link-hover-bg: #3690E1; And I got this : I guess that the CollabPanel doesn't work well with this theme, even if I put inherit for this. Do you have another solution to make the navbar bigger? A: A few notes : All Bootstrap themes contain a dark version. In your case, there is a light one, bootstrap-light.css and a dark version, bootstrap-dark.css. That's why you can have both in your own project. In bootstrap-light, you can put your own color values for the classes, the default ones are taken from bootstrap.css. Your changes will be visible in the light version, but not in the dark one. I would recommend you to tweak the base theme from Bootstrap. Check the bootstrap-dark.css for an example of how it can be done. Other notes : .navbar-inverse.navbar-toggle.icon-bar{ background-color: #565A61; } .navbar-inverse.navbar-nav>li>a { color: #FFFFFF; font-size: 15px; font-weight: bold; } .navbar-nav>li>a:hover, .navbar-nav>li>a:focus { color: #e4e4e4; }

What's New In?

Incoming Climate Science Data: Is It All Just Chilling/Startling/Baffling? This post originally appeared at The Conversation. If you're reading this, chances are you're already aware of Climategate, the Climategate scandal, the Climategate scandal 2, and, well, climategateian or chilgateian. Okay, so now you know what I'm talking about. If you have a brain and you're remotely interested in science, you've read about the work of some of the scientists who've warned about the problem of anthropogenic climate change — that is, climate change caused by human activity — and the perception of that work by its political opponents. You've probably read about the documents released by the climate-change deniers in the hacked emails of leading scientists. The case against climate change is what might be called "well-defended" by climate change deniers, and though there are many reasons for many people to be unconvinced, a common theme has emerged: The data shows that the public is not convinced by the science of the case against climate change. When the documents and the emails were released, some of them threw out a thought that's been hard to shake, even after several highly regarded scientific bodies (the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, the New York Times and BBC among others) have affirmed the science and its conclusions. The emails made that conclusion seem even less tenable, if we're willing to accept the conclusiveness of science. And that's where I run into problems. If I'm honest, there's something that's, well, chilling, starting, baffling about the data. Even after the large-scale scientific consensus is on my side, even after the findings of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change and the scientific academies around the world are recognized as support for the case against climate change, the data continues to leave me saying that the case against climate change might be as strong as it needs to be. For starters, in a recent poll conducted by the Pew Research Center, only 30 percent of adults surveyed believed that climate change is mostly caused by humans. Sure, a quick Google search of the results from other recent polls will reveal plenty of people who believe that climate change is a hoax, but in my mind, this adds to the
