Adobe has created several large tools that enable individual features to be manipulated by using one filter or tool after another. This arrangement is called a layer and, if used properly, enables the user to cut, paste, create shapes, modify colors, resize images, crop them, and many other features. What are the types of layers in Photoshop? There are three types of layers. What type of layer should be used depends upon what you need to do. A layer of type Brush is most commonly used for soft masking; a layer of type Gradient Map is most commonly used for color gradients; and a layer of type Composite is most commonly used for making different, usually transparent, overlays. But, layers of type Gradient Map and type Composite can be used to layer-based any feature that a layer of type Brush can be used for, such as masking. When editing a project, users often set up layers of type Composite. Then, if they find a feature they want to apply to a portion of a layer, they only need to drag that feature on top of the layer. For example, the user might drag a layer of type Composite to a layer of type Brush and use the Brushes features to cut and paste a portion of the layer's transparency into the newly applied layer of type Composite. All layers can be individually edited, moved, cropped, and turned on and off, but using the layer-based system in Photoshop is pretty much as easy as it gets. Beer Remember Pepsi Challenge? This was a Pepsi sponsored game that involved a group of six males and six females answering questions to determine who was best able to drink a can of Pepsi. That was way back in 1981. Back then Coca-Cola made the winning team drink a bottle of Coke. The public then voted on the best team and the winner was awarded a trip to New York to compete in the final stage of the Pepsi Challenge. The prize was the Pete Rose Trophy, which commemorated the Cincinnati Reds' Hall of Fame player who was suspended for betting on baseball games. These days, the Pepsi Challenge has a different look and feel. The winners today are noted business leaders and entrepreneurs and the prize is the Peter Thiel Fellowship. Named after the billionaire founder of PayPal, the Thiel Fellowship is a prestigious $100,000 fellowship that pays $15,000 to each winner for a year. The fellowship includes mentorship from a PayPal executive as well as networking and learning opportunities. Visit www.peterthielfellowship.org to learn more about the Thiel Fellowship. The California Brewers Association (CBA) has announced the winners of the 2016 California Craft Beer Awards in the California Beer or Craft Beer (Small Brewing) category. The awards were presented on May 12, 2016 at the Fox Theater in Oakland during The Great American Beer Festival. You can find the winners on the CBA website. There are 44 winners of the awards. The standard beer used in this category was 3.2% ABV. The top award was a bronze medal for Hop Hunter, by Golden Road Brewing, in Kalamazoo, Michigan. This is the first medal for Hop Hunter in five years. The Brewers Association later announced that the beer was actually from the German style Wheat beer style called Hefeweizen, with 5.2% ABV. This beer won a gold medal at the 2015 Great American Beer Festival in the German Wheat Beer style. The judges named another beer from Golden Road Brewing, Josefkanter Kellergut Saison, from the Saison style of beer, a gold medal for an innovative beer with 5.6% ABV. This was the second gold medal for Josefkanter Kellergut Saison in five years. The judging committee also named a gold medal for Plowboy from Hair of the Dog Brewing Company in Oceanside, California, which is located about an hour south of San Diego. Plowboy is a wheat beer using
