Wars Across the World is a wargame where the players will fight for control of different parts of the world. The idea is to recreate some current, near-past or just hypothetical wars. A continent or a continent plus two wars. Wars Across the World is turn-based and two-player friendly, and it is not a war game that plays out over the course of several days, there is no clock and the pace of the game is slow. However, with the varied event cards and the many possible events, the whole game can last up to about 15 turns. The rules in Wars Across the World are simple. They are set up with a goal in mind, and with as few interaction between the two players as possible. The two players may act as one single player, and so on. The players gain victory points in three different categories: - Victory points, which are mostly hard to score - Event points, which are generated by the event cards from the six decks - Event cards, which are a big part of the game, and feature various maps, scenarios, and multiple event cards for most situations The players also loose points in the three categories, and both players get three event cards per turn. The third category of points is not a score as much as a goal. It represents the ongoing tension between the two players, which is a focus of the game. Play is essentially a tug of war between the players for control of the following territories: - Africa, with Africa in the heart of a cycle of wars between the Nasserite Egypt and the Marxist Tanzania. - Angola, where the Namibia independence is at its peak and where Portugal has a heart attack. - Latin America, where the Manuel is at war with the Peruvian president Manuel Prado Ugarteche. - Peru, where the government of Peru has the import of weapons to the Namibia independence. - Spain, where the dictator's Falange is in full control. - United States, a dry country. The game is set in the late 1970s, and is set in a period of growing world tension. It contains a little over 100 event cards, some of them duplicated, so there are not many cards. Read The Manual. System Requirements: Windows platform. Internet connection. Intel Pentium3 or better. A new version of Wars Across the World was released in May, 2009, which added achievements, achievements to the event

You can think that the color cannot be altered, but you are wrong. With the hundreds of items, colors, and ways to think, you are able to create anything as long as you have the right color and mood. The goal is to reach the finish line. The finish line is the line where the height of the paper you draw on comes in contact with your "color palette". If you draw the line, then the color you choose cannot be changed. The game goes on with 120 levels.
