I was of course thrilled to take the opportunity to be part of the selection panel for this second edition of Compositiv . Universal Network Transceiver v1.2f My App Studio! Make your own Android, iOS and Windows apps! Download Now!. What could cause a compiler warning in C++ I have a library (libc++) that contains a function "u32 bit_and(u32 *a, u32 b)". I wrote an application that contains a function "u32 bit_and(u32 *a, u32 b)" that I want to test my libc++. Here's the source code of my application: #include "mylib.h" int main() { u32 val1 = 0x01234567; u32 val2 = 0x9a987766; u32 val3 = 0xabcdef89; u32 result = mylib::bit_and((u32 *)&val1, val2); return 0; } It builds but when I run it I got a warning in the libc++ library: mylib.c++:17:4: warning: parameter 'a' of 'u32 bit_and(u32 *, u32) [with T = unsigned int]' is an automatic variable (aka 'auto') [-Wautomatic] return bit_and(*a, x); ^ If I use mylibc++ with debugging symbols I see the statement "return bit_and(*a, x);" I believe "bit_and(*a, x)" is equivalent to (*a) bit_and (x) So I guess the automatic variable is the cause of the warning. Is there a way to tell the compiler "bit_and(x,y) is a function, not an automatic variable"? Or what could I do so the warning doesn't occur? I know there are a lot of questions on Stack Overflow about what to do to not cause a warning like this.
