Laurence Wilson, "The Sergeant's Story", The New York Times, July 8, 1920, p. 1. LAW AND ORDER: SPECIAL EDITION navy pvtle Lawrence Wilson, the commercial traveler, is shot from behind in his hotel room here in Chicago by Burt Kenyon, formerly of the Westchester County [NY] County Police, now in the employ of the steamship company, and besides being a confessed murderer of his first wife, is sought for the murder of his second wife, Mrs. Mary Davis, in Chicago, last fall. The widowed Mrs. Wilson, originally from Illinois, was a former nurse of the St. Mary's Girls' Dormitories, was spending a few days in Chicago. Kenyon, according to his former policeman's identification, was in Chicago on July 3, 1920, and discharged a .45-caliber shot through the window of the room occupied by Wilson, but the bullet struck the ceiling and killed Miss Davis, who was in the room and not a guest of the hotel. The New York Times of July 10, 1920, carried an account of the murder under the heading, "The Sergeant's Story." [Verse I] "LAW AND ORDER" SPECIAL EDITION THIS MORNING, I WAS SURE THAT the police were searching for a murderer of Mrs. Mary Davis, the wife of Lawrence Wilson. I knew that, in the struggle that followed the discharge of a bullet through the windows of the room occupied by Lawrence and Miss Davis, Lawrence had been killed. I had heard his wife's broken screams, I had heard the frantic cries of the murderer and Miss Davis and I knew that, no matter how the struggle might end, the murderer would be overpowered, taken to prison. I believed, too, that with Lawrence dead and with the murderer
