When I saw that there was an indie game only a few months out, I put it on my list to play. This game is adorable. It's been a different feel than all of my games, which are typically very long or fast-paced. Bean is based on a real person, with a real name, two real dogs, and a real house. I must say that the attention to detail is beautiful, as is how the characters react to decisions. I just hope that more indie developers use the same level of focus and commitment that Tripwire did on this game. Strongly recommend this! by Cyclops313 This is a quick, simple game that will keep you laughing. The characters are hilarious and the pace of the game is just right. You can play this game solo or get multiplayer games going. One of my favorite games and I'm not typically a fan of gamers. :) My cats love the Christmas music by Jarrel So I played this this evening with my cats after watching the movie Holiday. They seemed to love it as well as the music. I'm enjoying the simple interface and hand management. I did notice that it had some delays where they would freeze for 3-4 seconds after entering a task. Since it was my first play through I thought to myself 'that's not so bad' but after further play throughs I noticed that it seemed to happen at random. What's new:

Woebegone Woods is a miniature wargame terrain board published by Avalon Hill in 1979, created by game designer John Hill. The game board was originally designed for the MG3/MG4 Sherman tanks. Description The map covers a 5.5 x 4.5 square terrain format that is subdivided into 36 areas. Each area has a unique set of roads, railroads, bridges, terrain elevation, objects such as trees and people, houses, and buildings. All terrain areas are of varying sizes, and represent different types of terrain. Elevation is standardized to different heights in feet for ease in tables for different GMs and for ease in gun line of sight. An area consists of any or all of the following types of terrain: Open Fields—Land with few, if any, structures or obstacles Hill Fields—Land with one, two, or three obstacles in addition to buildings, trees, hills, covered ways. Each of the 35 squares on the map, which are of equal area, is further subdivided into four areas. The four areas, north, south, east, and west, are separated by roads. Each of the four areas (north, south, east, west) is further subdivided by a network of unique roads (marked red in the map) that form a line, except that it only connects to adjacent squares, with no diagonal roads (connected in the "blocked off" sections). One is required to book in one of the 36 areas, with the square marked red marked on the map. In reality, it is possible to book in more than one area, using all of its roads. In the official rules, GMs were required to book only in a single area; however, due to the lack of rules specifically written for Woebegone Woods, GMs are encouraged to use all of the roads available to them in a given area. Within the confines of the roll to enter an area, the GM is free to choose a road that connects to a place of his or her choosing. The game is played by two players, who take turns moving their units to a location on the map chosen by the GM. Woebegone Woods released three expansions. These included a counter kit, covering 12 squares (Marked yellow in the map below), with conditions adapted to the current range, and a map expansion, covering the rest of the map. The map expansion also includes road
