POTENTIAL DATE! Saw him at the Callie DeVille show Sunday night. I was one row back of him so I could see his cute butt and long legs and tall frame, but he was never looking at me. I was tall so I was leaning towards him, but when I made eye contact with him I didn't get a kick, so something must have been going on with him. I was going to stick around to see where he's going but decided to leave after a few more people left. I have no idea if he was at the Houghville show on the same night, but if he was, I could see myself taking him to the next show. :blink: I was out with my dad when he introduced me to a boy that I just met the next day. It was instant IRL like no other. I was in junior high and I was completely and utterly obsessed with him. He was tall, cute, built, and just a wild sex beast. We made out that first night and he took me out for ice cream and we giggled for the rest of the night (he had his long hair tied back). I still can't wait to finally get to see him again. I went on a date with him two weeks ago. He was nice, he didn't pressure me, we had a good time, we talked on the way back. But he's leaving for a job in two weeks and I might be moving to a different state. He didn't say "we should do this again" or anything, but I'm kinda sad when he doesn't call me. :shrug: You know this is a mean world when a dude can be completely taken by a girl and go on no more than three or four dates and the guy dating her is still like, "eh" or "okay". He was just polite in a clear way. Don't ever let a man treat you like that. It's not good. I met a guy this past week that I like. He's short and fat and a very sweet person. He's the best thing that's happened to me all week. I don't know if he likes me or not because he's never made any moves. This happened earlier today, too. We were both getting breakfast. He was wearing shorts, a white T-shirt, and flip-flops. And a leather skull-cap. Uh oh... This was in
