I also think that you might need to run your program in a different directory, as all your scripts are in a specific directory. Also, since you are using an absolute path (the directory where your scripts are located) and a relative path (./) I think you should include the path in your regular expression so that you are not leaving anything out (for example, the carriage return). I have added these to my code below. For me, the output for your script is as follows: hello/hello.py hello/hello hello.py hello ./hello.py ./hello ./hello/ ./hello.py Also, if your code is using os as a module, you could put your module functions in another file (test.py for example). And, I put in some code to make sure that your directory exists and file exists (I have also used os.walk, as you stated that you have done before). I will also append my file and where your output came from. (I am also atributosdediospaulwasherPDF not sure if the output comes from the regular expression or my directory change) #!/usr/bin/python3 import os import sys os.chdir("/Users/jb/Desktop/Test") os.chdir("."). #Create directory if it does not exist def create_directory(path): try: os.mkdir(path) except OSError: if not os.path.isdir(path): print("Directory already exists " + path) return else: create_directory(path) return create_directory("Desktop") print ("Testing " + "Desktop" + " -- " + "PATHTO"); # Create file if it does not exist def create_file(path): try: e79caf774b
