I have a Amazon Fire TV Stick and I am planning to connect the device to the analog audio output jack of the TV. I figured out that the Fire TV has an HDMI input for audio and that the audio output of the stick goes through the micro USB plug. So, is it sufficient just to connect the audio out of the micro USB cable to the output of the TV's audio system? A: Yes, for any device (device A) to connect to device B, device A will normally have the following requirements: The output of device B is connected to the input of device A. (This is the requirement that you've already covered. This is the "analog audio output jack" of the TV in your question.) The input of device B is connected to an analog audio port. (Otherwise, device B will show up as a HDMI device when connected to the TV in question, which is not a standard way for analog devices to be connected.) So yes, if you connect the audio out of your micro USB cable to the audio jack of the TV, your fire TV should be able to
