Emmett's release was greeted with optimism by many in the local sports industry, as well as fans, who were looking to see what kind of value a team can add to the Rams' organization during the upcoming draft. But that optimism quickly changed on Tuesday as news emerged the Rams were attempting to trade the five-time Pro Bowler. "There were a lot of variations to the story," said Chris Johnson, a Fox Sports Radio host and Rams fan. "We don't know exactly what they were looking to do, but if Emmett was coming to your team for the right price, and you can offer him a good financial plan and the team is good from a talent perspective . . . if it's the right fit for both sides, that would be a win for everyone. It would be a win for fans, a win for Emmett and a win for the Rams. "But there also has to be a 'right price.' I mean, if it was lower than what he's worth, it would be a loser. It wouldn't be a win for anyone." NFL Media Insider Ian Rapoport reported that the Rams and Eagles were seeking to trade with each other. According to the report, Emmett was available and the Rams would have to pay up. Johnson doesn't know the exact details of the deal that was agreed upon. He said that because of that fact, he doesn't want to get too "over-hype" about the situation. "But if the Rams could do it, that would be a huge win for the city of Los Angeles," Johnson said. "They could add a true star for only the second time in franchise history. The first time was (Jeff) Fisher, who took the Rams to the Super Bowl a few years ago. It would be a huge win if that were to happen." Emmett, a native of Atlanta, was a four-time Pro Bowler with the Rams and made five Pro Bowls for the franchise. His first stint with the Rams was a 2010 trade from the Patriots that also saw him move from tight end to wide receiver. Injuries cut his season short in 2011, as Emmitt was able to play in 11 games and haul in 21 passes for 364 yards and six touchdowns.

Q: How to make public content on my site I'm working on a site and I'm trying to have private pages. I don't want people to be able to go to the page with the url /profile/ and do things that don't allow them to view the contents of the page, since I'm a school and the users have to complete a form just to view the content. So far I've tried password protecting the page by using the password for the form, but that doesn't work since anyone can change the url to be /profile/ and submit the form without logging in. I've tried making the post, put, and delete methods private as well, but then people can just get the data from the model. On a side note, is the url scheme /username/profile/private enough to make the content private? And what is a common way to do this? A: The first issue you are talking about is that you can't make a web server completely secure. The more restrictions you put in place, the more your server is going to be able to see. Let's take the default HTML form as an example: It not only allows you to submit information, but it also exposes the method you are using to do so, either GET or POST. If a user were to make the request to the form using the javascript window.open, it would not be possible to tell the difference between the two and the site would appear to allow that. Obviously this is not how it's done normally. A better approach would be to ensure that no site can be reached by people other than a few trusted sites you control. If you have registered your web site and have an application firewall in front of it, you could set restrictions on the sites that can be accessed, but even if you wanted to give other sites permission to view your page, they are still going to be able to gather the information since it is exposed anyways. Another way to protect the login process would be to let the users log in through a special app provided by you. This way, only you can login and information is kept secret only to you. Q: Read file, display numbers and carry out an operation Write a program that reads in a file containing numbers arranged as shown below. The numbers are separated from each other by one or more spaces and may be negative. Each number is to be displayed to
