Using the Elements Timeline panel Photoshop CS6 and the Elements versions have a timeline tool with which you can easily add animation effects to images. You can use the timeline tool to add subtle or dramatic motion to a series of images. You can add simple effects such as fade, warp, transform, or distort, or you can create more complex animations with cut and splice (described in Chapter 16). In this section, you explore the Timeline panel and how to use it to create your image's animation. Making the Timeline Panel your hero The timeline tool enables you to place images and animate them individually or simultaneously. It's great to have multiple images set to play at the same time, making it easy to change one image and see the others change in the same frame. To view the timeline, click the icon in the bottom-left corner of the tool at the bottom of the workspace (refer to Figure 16-5). You see a little house icon with a play symbol. If you click that icon, it turns into a play symbol, as shown in the top of Figure 16-6. Figure 16-5: Click the house icon in the bottom-left corner of the tool to activate the Timeline panel. Figure 16-6: Click the play symbol (the house with a play symbol) to start a new sequence of images. After you click the play icon, you can drag a marquee (a blue rectangle) around a few of the images on the canvas, as in Figure 16-7. This is your starting point for a new sequence of images. At the start of the project, you can place several images in a single sequence. You can start multiple sequences, which are useful if you want to place an image or sequence of images on multiple layers and then edit each layer separately. After you click the play icon, you can then change the placement or size of the image in your timeline (a blue square at the top right of the timeline). You can also change the speed at which it plays, as shown in Figure 16-8. With the interface in Figure 16-8, you can change the speed at which the frame plays. You can't change the speed,

That button comes from a library. There are no errors in the library. But I can't see the image in the button. I searched some forums and found out that we need to set this attribute android:elevation="5dp", as this value comes from the attribute "Elevation". So I have added it inside the button xml and changed the value to 5dp, but still couldn't see the image. Any help would be appreciated. XML:

A plan that could overhaul east Boulder's transit routes is heading toward adoption. A citizen advisory committee on the issue has wrapped up a presentation about the proposed plan and plans for adding more buses, starting in the fall of 2014. And now that the city is poised to start the process, the public has an opportunity to weigh in. "It's really something of a public post-mortem to the process of making decisions on how to get more traffic on to our streets," said Lisa Castaneda, who represents the CAC on the area's pedestrian and cyclist advocacy group, Bike East Boulder. The city is considering zoning changes, including dedicating a smaller portion of the roughly 20 blocks along the University of Colorado's current EcoDitch campus to housing and a new retail strip. Also included in the zoning changes are provisions for a bike- and pedestrian-only lane on Colfax Ave. from 13th to 20th streets and 29th and 30th avenues, and reconfiguring 19th street between Colfax and University Parkway to have two, two-way boulevards, at about the same time as reconfiguring 28th street. The Boulder City Council will take up the issue in the fall. The update: Here's what's on the table: — For zoning changes on the EcoDitch campus, a portion of the campus could be dedicated to residential housing and another for retail that would abut the future EcoDitch Linear Park. — The transit plan would add one bus route that would run from a new stop at 18th and Pearl streets, down 28th street, around the corner on Pecos St. and N. 30th Ave. through the city's LoDo district, up University Parkway, through the EcoDitch campus, up 29th Avenue, on west Colfax Avenue and into the community along Colo. 4. A second option would add a new 15- to 25-seat bus on 28th Street and 30th Avenue, but bypass the LoDo district and the UC campus entirely. Both buses are expected to move from the EcoDitch park to the lower Platte River and continue to the Larimer County Fairgrounds and the Boulder County Fair. The project would cost a projected $27.3 million, and would take two years to complete, according to the summary prepared by the city's transportation department. The CAC meeting was initially scheduled for a vote
