MemoriesOnTV serial number is without crackProject: PB-03-1-2 In a previous post (we described the formation of a hydrothermal fluid-rock interaction where mineral-rich water is

The amount of rock removed from the fracture depends on the rock's porosity and permeability.

The fluids released are also mineral-rich and contain the mineral mixtures characteristic of the hydrothermal fluid. Here, we study a nearby fault within the main fracture and evaluate fluid-rock interactions in the fault. A highly fractured basement is eroding at a rate greater than the rate of groundwater discharge into the main fracture.

These two events are linked via the inflow of hydrothermal fluid into the main fracture (Figure 1).

A seismometer has been set up in the eastern side of the main fracture (Figure 2). Approximately 20 micrograms of rock are displaced daily in the fracture, a figure which suggests that mineral-rich water exits the fracture into the seismometer's focal zone. If the depth of the influx is on the order of 10 meters from the seismometer focal zone,
