Eclipse movements between the polymorphic enzymes of cholangiocarcinoma in the rat. The activities of cholangiocarcinoma (CCA) both in vivo and in culture are characterized by the synthesis of a number of polymeric mucins containing N-acetylgalactosamine (GalNAc). An abnormal secretion of a GalNAc-conjugated mucin was also detected in the serum of a rat with CCA by thin layer chromatography. In order to elucidate the origin of the serum GalNAc-conjugated mucin, its metabolism was studied by incubating the enzyme activity responsible for it in sera of rats bearing CCA. Following incubation of the serum, a GalNAc-containing mucin was released which, when analyzed by concanaval
