The game allows users to create games, players can play games created by other users, and purchase items to customize their games. It was downloaded over 55,000 times to its initial public release, and has received a continual stream of updates and new game content through 2014, when Roblox released the Rixty mobile app, which allows users to download, play, and share games. Roblox is currently available on Android, iOS, Windows, OS X, Linux, and some other platforms, and is supported in more than 191 countries around the world. As of November 2014, Roblox had over 164 million monthly active users, including more than half of all American children under 16, and more than half of all American children between the ages of 8 and 16. In addition to playing games created by others, users are able to create their own games and share them on Roblox. Some users play these games cooperatively through a player-versus-environment mode, and other users contribute to the game with scripts and backgrounds. Roblox has become an increasingly popular application for children, with its most popular user-created game, Magic Door, receiving over 4 million plays. Roblox remains one of the few companies to focus on virtual worlds for the development of the games, user experience, and technology. However, Roblox's revenue model differs from most multi-player online games, being 100% free to download

Edmonton Prairie Crossing The Edmonton Prairie Crossing is the interchange between the Trans-Canada Highway (Highway 15) and Edmonton's ring road. It is located just south of the City Centre Airport near the intersection of McKerrow Road and Beach Drive in Edmonton, Alberta, Canada. Although officially designated as a grade-separated interchange (the first of its kind in Canada) in April 2010, the city plans to build a new overpass to separate a new carpool lane from the expanding ring road, along with three new access roads that will be linked to the downtown core.

Description The interchange is a combination of controlled-access road with grade separated, limited-access road. There are three cloverleaf ramps that are active and two connectors that are partly active.

History The interchange was originally planned to be the southern terminus of the city's ring road (the former Highway 15 on-ramp being named the most dangerous "access point in the city" and anti-road vehicle activists' favourite freeway). In September 2007, Edmonton's city council approved a plan to build a complete loop around the city, taking Transportation City Avenue as a linear park. The alternate route would end at a trumpet interchange between Parking Lot B and the Midway Shopping Centre. After angry local residents protested this decision, a revised design reduced the ring road's footprint from to. During the cancellation of the dual-carriageway extension, the plan was to add the northwest connector as a second intersection and make it the southern end of the ring road. The interchange is a collaboration between Aviva Canada, Inc., Calgary's Abernathy Mowbray and Toronto's John St/Snyderville Neighbourhoods. Their expertise and consultation helped the interchange win the design competition in 2009. The routing of the interchange was adjusted, and the interchange was described as "a radical departure from local government planning" because of its lack of opposition. With the failure of Alberta's
