Saudi law recognises only men as owners and thus prohibits women from holding rights of property ownership. Women are not allowed to travel alone, and some laws make women utterly dependent on their family or male guardian. The 2009 constitution states that "laws are for the protection of citizens from abuse," and that the "protection of citizens' rights, their property and public morals is the principal goal." However, numerous laws discriminate against women. On 1 June 2018, the Saudi government repealed a law forbidding women from driving. Women's rights are seen as something of a taboo subject in Saudi Arabia, and the country is one of the most conservative in the world. Many prominent Saudi women never drive and avoid any public appearance. Due to Saudi cultural norms, Saudi women have less right to employment and work experience than in other countries. Prosecution of crimes against women Saudi law prohibits rape, known in Arabic as الزنا. Women are presumed guilty if they are arrested after the alleged crime. Women are also prosecuted if they are raped by a man who is not an immediate family member, or if they are sexually harassed by a non-family member. As of 2008, Saudi Arabia has ratified the 1985 United Nations Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, which includes some minimum standards of basic human rights for women. However, women's rights are largely only expressed through "moral exhortation" rather than formal legal guidelines. According to Human Rights Watch, in 2014 Saudi authorities executed at least 12 Saudi women for murder and sexual assault. There were also multiple executions of women in Saudi Arabia in 2017, such as the public flogging of two men in Jiddah for raping a girl in 2014. Law on citizenship According to article 92 of the Constitution of Saudi Arabia, "Every citizen of the Kingdom who is of age has the right to be elected

12 ½ ago CodeGear RAD Studio 2007 crack keygen. Our wise, esteemed, and visionary leader has issued a vision statement for Earth Day. Go read it. Then go sign a petition asking your local school to continue operations for at least a few years. We highly recommend this strategy. But if you want to go a step further, you might start a private campaign to make your own town/city/or county/state, take over the school board, and then draw up a curriculum for the kids. If you have the means, you could keep all of this going for a generation or two. If you put things in writing like this, the legislators will crack and start supporting your crusade, and if you have enough money you can spend it lobbying your congressmen and senators to vote your way. This is an audacious idea and it's worth looking into - though I doubt anyone in a position to do it will get in trouble for discussing such an idea. It could benefit America, and probably even the world. And it's fun and may be a great learning experience. Many of the problems the kids will encounter in school, especially all the government ones, will be solved by their parents, not by the school system. Just this morning I read of the important role of the teacher in the revolutionary war. So maybe you should be petitioning your school board to continue the curriculum of history to a counterfactual future and ask your kids not to learn about Christopher Columbus, the American Revolution, et al? One last thing: Be nice to your kids, think about them. Don't be surprised if they grow up bad. Like anything else worth doing, this one is worth putting in a lot of effort to do properly.
