The photos clearly show the huge gashes in the hull and a big oil patch stuck on the bottom of the ship. The incident took place on the Norwegian coast near the city of Trondheim. A surveillance video from the port of Larvik show the ship going up the wharf after its hull is split into three separate pieces and a hole is created under one of the hulls. A hole is seen in the port of Larvik, Norway, and debris from the ship can be seen on the bottom of the harbor. Photo courtesy of Titanic Star. Norsk Tipping reportedly manages the ship and sent security footage of the incident to the Norwegian TV channel TV2. The report says that the ship accidentally collided with a pier on the shore and started taking in water. Photo courtesy of Titanic Star. The incident took place in the city of Larvik in the region of Aust-Agder, Norway. The ship is the ship is 65 meters long and carries 6,500 tons of oil. The tanker was on a mission to the port of Larvik in northern Norway. The report says that the ship hit a pier and the impact opened the ship in several places. Gashes were created where the ship hit the ground, and the large gashes were created on the ship's side. Photo courtesy of Titanic Star. One of the holes is located under the tanker's bow where its main processing unit was, and a gas tank is damaged in several places. Photo courtesy of Titanic Star. Oil is leaking from the impact and the ship is not moving. The ship's captain said that he had no problems with the tanker. The report says that the tanker hit the port's pier and all of the damage to the ship is due to an impact with the pier. It is expected that the ship will be taken out and repaired.
