On 16 September, the Indian team was stunned by a new-look England side captained by James Anderson in the first Test match at the Oval. Four days later, the The best time for the five-match Test series between England and India is at Southgate in mid-June.O: How to use fscanf() with arrays I want to collect data from a file until I reach the last entry in the file. In the file, I have the following: Timestamp, X1, X2, X3, ..., XN, Y1, Y2, ..., YM, K1, K2, ..., KN, where some of the digits in the timestamp are missing (eg. X2 or Y4 are missing). I don't know which digits are present and which are missing. The indices are all consecutive. If I use fscanf(), I want it to parse the first two or three columns (depending on the number of digits in the timestamp) and put the data in some preallocated arrays. However, the fscanf() and I know I have to check the return-code of the function to find out whether I read everything from the file or not (is there a better way?). When I'm done with using the fscanf(), I want to use sscanf() to go to the next line. The problem is that the fscanf() scans some more lines than I want. If the third digit in the timestamp is 4, fscanf() will read the fourth line in the file. In the scenario above, this is the first digit, but it is what I want. How do I stop this? Or is there a better way to go about this? Here's my current code (it's not much), but I know I'm doing something wrong: long timestamp; double data[12]; int nData = 0; char file[BUFF]; FILE *fd; if(!fd = fopen(argv[1], "r")){ perror("Couldn't open input file"); exit(1); } while(fscanf(fd, " %d %d %d %d %d %d %d %d %d %d", &

Although our present data cannot rule out contribution of extrapair parental care to anxiety-like behaviors in female offspring, the present data suggest that the influence of the paternal side of care on anxiety-like behaviors emerges in adulthood. There are several methodological issues for these studies. First, the current study used a cross-fostering design with a mouse donor mother. This design does not completely rule out the possibility that an enriched environment experienced by the donor mother might influence the anxiety-like behavior of the mouse donor. Indeed, the enriched environment for the mother was in part based on what was observed in the donor mouse during the present study. However, two lines of evidence suggest that the impact of the enriched environment is negligible. First, in a study using the same test method, the novel environment was taken as a contextual control. If the cross-f
