There can be clients in many countries and the application has to be able to run everywhere, so I cannot use a "centralized application server" to decrypt the client's data. I want the clients to be able to do their backups (save the data to different location). Therefore I need the Java application to be able to encrypt its files somehow, so that other applications cannot read them without the correct password, and so that the client's backups (if he wants to use them) to be the same if he has run the application on a different machine. Are there any ready-to-use Java libraries which do this? A: Libraries for encrypting files in Java include: Java Cryptography Extension Java SecureRandom If you want to encrypt files programatically then just use a jasypt Bouncy Castle your.key/.password for it will be stored encrypted in the database.
