Arizona lawmakers approved a bill Monday that would make it a felony to park a vehicle in a no-parking zone and allow the city of Phoenix to file a lawsuit against the violators. The bill would provide serious penalties for people who park in no-parking zones and block emergency access to public facilities, according to Rep. Jay Lawrence, D-Tucson. Lawrence said the bill would likely be a repeat offender, meaning he expects the city to be filing lawsuits against these violators. "It's a huge public safety problem," Lawrence said. "Most of these are repeat offenders and they are not honoring the law." The bill will now be in the hands of Gov. Doug Ducey. The bill is one of several that was being voted on during the first day of the second special session, which began Monday morning.

Other bills that passed in committee include: Ⓓ A bill that would allow the mayor to appoint a lieutenant governor to serve as the acting governor when the governor is unavailable. Ⓓ A bill that would reinstate the desalination tax that was repealed in 2013. Ⓓ A bill that would allow the department of agriculture to reduce the authorization of pesticide applications. Ⓓ A bill that would make the state's medical marijuana program eligible for federal funding. Ⓓ A bill that would exempt some small businesses from paying state sales tax. Ⓓ A bill that would prohibit abortions on women's health or for sex selection. Ⓓ A bill that would allow the Arizona Christian School Association and other religious organizations to refuse health care and other services related to contraception and abortions if they oppose such practices. Ⓓ A bill that would allow Arizona's school safety commission to spend $25 million on security enhancements and other costs. Ⓓ A bill that would make it a crime to pay an individual for an act that would work to
