from a 2d perspective, the intelligent inspection of 3d art artwork is an excellent natural learning aid. without the aid of a teacher, the pupil will learn more in a few minutes than years of a less engaging school curriculum. 3d art can help pupils comprehend abstract concepts and symbolic representations. it can also help them build confidence. 3d models can help develop the visual literacy skills necessary for creating artwork, including eye-hand coordination. 3d art education can help pupils' spatial relations and reasoning skills and mental imagery, which aid in the creative process. currently, 3d art is being used in art lessons to teach technique and composition, but no research has been published in this area. avid readers are often fascinated with scientific concepts, and their continual interest in the sciences leads to a myriad of outcomes—including education, careers, and self-fulfillment. despite their central role in the world's knowledge, most disciplines of study lack disciplinary-specific fiction! to remedy this deficiency, the IEA is launching the first annual "discipline fiction" theme for 2018. described in a forthcoming essay, "discipline fiction" focuses on how fiction written by, and about, scientists encourages students to consider real-world research challenges from novel perspectives. while most science fiction stories are written by non-scientists, some of the best science fiction (and non-fiction) stories are written by active scientists. this can help students imagine new avenues for knowledge creation. this study investigated the role of judgments of uncertainty in the development of adolescents' perceptions of their academic identities. a multi-wave longitudinal design was used to examine these relationships among early adolescents. we employed a variable-centered approach, in which participants' perceptions of their academic identities (i.e., academic, athletic, artistic, etc.) were used to predict their perceptions of their uncertainty in four domains: academic, physical, social, and future. the results indicate that the more adolescents believe their uncertainties in these domains, the less certain they appear to be in these domains. that is, older adolescents who were more uncertain about their academic status were also more likely to be uncertain about their athletic status. lastly, for future-oriented uncertainty, adolescents were more likely to be uncertain about academic goals than any other identity. findings suggest that judgment of uncertainty may have a role to play in the development of adolescents' academic identities.

i am honored to have my work chosen and share as a finalist with other talented artists in this year's challenge. i am grateful to the judges for the recognition. i am also humbled by the positive feedback about my work. thank you all for sharing your lives with me. we and our fellow artists, as well as our families, friends, colleagues, and neighbors have been very busy as we work on our art and our lives. my aim is to share my experience with my readers and always be open to new ideas and feedback so i can continue to improve as an artist. i am happy that i can participate in the we are the people virtual art project and be a part of this important work supporting the artists in this pandemic and raising awareness about the risks of distracted driving. the hard news is that this may be the last we are the people blog post. i have been notified that as of june 15, my official post will be on the official california artist website: www.sandraboynnton.com

. i will have more news on this later. research interests: questionnaire development and research. as a research scientist, i love working with people and am always looking for ways to get better at what i do. i have a keen interest in collecting realtime data on participants as they are responding to a questionnaire and combining it with eye tracking and other data to understand how they are processing the information presented in the questionnaire.

research interests: i work in a variety of graduate programs, including public health research with students in behavioral and clinical sciences, applied research with health care researchers, public health research with students in public health and epidemiology, environmental health research with students in environmental health sciences, and health policy research with public health policy students. my research interests are: tobacco control; obesity; opioid misuse; tobacco use by pregnant women;

substance use disorders;
tobacco cessation interventions and evaluation; and
motivational interviewing (mi). my general focus is on reducing health disparities among underserved populations. over the years, i have given numerous talks on student research, mentorship, peer-

reviewed manuscripts, and professional presentations. for instance, i gave the keynote address for an oxford university conference on tobacco control. i am a certified motivational interviewing
