Waterfox Classic 2019.10 (x64) [Latest]

it may not support all features, it may not be as fast (not likely at the moment, as its built from scratch from the firefox source code, not a hybrid of the two codebases like pale moon is), but for the features it does support, it does them well. and waterfox classic does them better than pale moon does. it may not be as fast as the optimized version of firefox, but that seems to be a matter of personal preference and habit. its still faster than pale moon, for those who prefer to get the latest and greatest. btw, the "switch to waterfox classic" page, for now, still says "about:config.preferences.extensions.enabled" is "true", although "preferences.privacy.third-party-content-enabled" is "true", which doesn't make much sense to me. i assume its an intentional error on the part of the maintainers. it looks like pale moon is still using an ancient version of the gecko engine, and it will probably never be updated to the current version. so its going to be a pain for a while for pale moon users to keep up with the latest firefox version, because firefox is basically always getting faster and better, and pale moon is being held back by the ancient gecko engine. mozilla has a great track record of updating their browser for a number of releases after its released, so i expect waterfox classic will be updated to firefox 56+ very soon. if i remember correctly, the last major version of firefox to be updated after the release was firefox 55. also, it looks like pale moon is already using the gecko 62 engine. so it shouldnt be too far in the future when waterfox classic switches to firefox 56 or 57, assuming pale moon makes its switch at the same time. assuming pale moon can survive, of course. 5ec8ef588b
