tilling fields, breeding cattle, driving tractors: what sounds like work to some, equals pure joy for fans of the farming simulator. the game impresses with its attention to detail, its versatility, and its slow pace. players of farming simulator enjoy the slow nature of the video game and can leave everyday life behind during long trips with the combine harvester. however, this doesn't mean you have to go at it alone, because farming simulator 2019 (fs19) can also be played online. however, to do this you'll need access to a gaming server. the gi.biz interview comes off the back of giants software's e3 announcement that they'd secured the john deere license. i don't know john deere from a dear john letter, but apparently this was a big deal for many tractheads - y'know, folks interested in tractors beyond joyriding across virtuafields with their pals while blasting bangarang. aye it's a sponsored article so it is sorta an advert, but there's interesting stuff in there beyond frey puffing up giants. in farming simulator 20, take control of vehicles and machines faithfully recreated from leading brands in the industry. for the first time, this includes john deere, the largest agriculture machinery company in the world. at the same time, we were concerned that we couldn't take the development of the game into our own hands. we wanted to build our own world and all its features and aspects. we wanted to create our own machine in every detail, from the steering wheel and the buttons to the last nut and bolt. we wanted to build our own game logic, the game mechanics and the control systems. we wanted to make all the objects in the game move and react to your actions. and we wanted to create the farming world in a very realistic way. we wanted to grow things in your own greenhouses, harvest them and sell them to your customers.
