Wintv-hvr-950q 24 Digit Serial Number

if you want to change the serial number on a product, you should use an official serial number program. many vendors (including the makers of the serial number tool) sell these, but they might only give you the name of the tool they sell. if you want to determine the exact product serial number, you can look at the model name for a used serial number or at the codes that are printed on the face of the product. both of these are typically printed on a sticker. if you found the correct serial number, open the "file" and see it you can see which revision it corresponds to. in the version i use its a little bit difficult. the serial number are printed on the top of the box. if you can find one of those boxes you can get the serial number. you can also try to tune the tv to show all serial numbers. if you press the buttons with your hand you will see the serial number, but also the other personal data of the box. unfortunately i never got to the bottom of it. the type of information i wanted to find in the intel trace files was the serial number. i used wireshark to capture the data from the wintv-hvr-950q. the traces consisted of a bunch of binary data that i captured as text and converted to hexadecimal form. the serial number was really easy to detect as it was just the number repeated for each button press. i would need to convert the hexadecimal data into a standard text format. finding the line in the hex file that contained the serial number would be the key to getting the data. i had already learned how to use the intel trace print tool to convert hexadecimal data to text. 5ec8ef588b
