How the Titans can take better care of their prisoners The Tennessee Titans have been pretty good to their prisoners over the years. The franchise has given more than 40% of its player contracts in exchange for jail time since 1990, with players granted early release in exchange for serving time for legal problems. The team has taken part in Boys and Girls Club initiatives and given scholarships to prisoners. Other teams look to emulate the Titans' model. However, time will be getting closer to serving time in jail for this latest summer's indiscretions and the Titans will have to continue taking better care of their players' wellbeing. The Tennessee Department of Corrections has sent out a public announcement reiterating that all inmates are notified if the Titans will be visiting, and that the practice will continue. The Titans will pay a $200,000 fine for the two Sunday incidents, but should really be looking at setting a better example by giving their
