CandlesEpigenetic regulation of the transcription of Rv1737c, a putative antigen-antibody complex. Rv1737c is a 38.5 kDa lipoprotein antigen that is secreted by Mtb in association with Ag85 and that accumulates in the granuloma. We have examined the regulation of the transcription of Rv1737c in a murine model of TB. Quantitative real-time PCR analysis showed a progressive increase in Rv1737c mRNA expression throughout the granuloma. This increase was not due to variations in the transcription of the Rv1737c gene, as shown by the use of a Rv1737c-luciferase reporter, but rather reflected an increase in the stability of Rv1737c mRNA and a concomitant decrease in protein. ChIP assays using an antibody against Rv1737c showed that it is present in association with RNA polymerase at the promoter of the Rv1737c gene and that this association is further increased following PHA stimulation. These results indicate that the stability of Rv1737c mRNA is regulated by its promoter occupancy by RNA polymerase and the availability of binding sites for this enzyme./* Zenburn style from voldmar.ru (c) Vladimir Epifanov based on dark.css by Ivan Sagalaev */
