Once you run the program, all you have to do is select an existing icon and choose a new name for it, such as "My New Icon.ico". This is done using the SVERDYSH Icon Creator Product Key main window as illustrated in Figure 1. When you are ready, just click the Icon Creator icon and select "Start conversion". The Icon Creator will start automatically and continue converting the selected icon file into a new ICO file for you. After the conversion is finished, the Icon Creator will prompt you to confirm the filename you want to use for the new ICO file as well as the location where you would like the newly created icon to be placed. If you do not like the new ICO icon and want to choose a different one, you can select the "..." button and then select the desired icon from the offered list. After you are done, click the "Start conversion" button to start a new conversion process. After you have finished generating icons using Icon Creator, you can drag and drop the newly created ICO files onto a Windows Explorer window to insert them into a folder or onto a file as illustrated in Figure 2. Because it's all we hear about and yet, it doesn't seem to exist. There have been a lot of complaints about the unsustainability of solar in our world. Some people are saying it's not worth it or it will only be able to deliver a little bit of power, which isn't enough. There's been also another set of people, which seem to think that solar is easy. That we don't need any technology or government grant to get it. That we just need to pour some cheap panels on the roof and all our problems will be solved. Well I'm here to tell you, it's not that simple. Solar is anything but simple, and yet we still hear that it is. We're all familiar with solar panels. They are made from plastic that's covered in glass. The other side is the cells that generate the electricity. It's the same plastic and the same glass on the other side. We also know that solar power is not that easy to produce or distribute. To understand the power produced by solar you need to know how sunlight behaves. The way solar panels work is, they use the energy from the sun in the form of photons. A photon is a particle of light. That light is then turned into electricity. When a photon strikes a cell, it will strike a metal wire inside the cell. This is called the junction. The wire is at a much higher temperature than the other parts of the cell. In turn, the heat of the cell will cause a flow of electricity. However, the area where the junction is located is where the majority of the power is generated. The power is not distributed evenly across the cell, and it is only found at the junction. Because of this, the cells have to be big enough to generate enough power for you to use. A standard 6 cell solar panel is good for generating around 30 watts. Because of this, there is a limit to how many solar panels you can put on the same surface, in order to make a full sized solar panel. You could potentially get around 25% of the sun's energy, using 5 standard panels. Another thing you need to know is that the sun is
