[Determination of ochratoxin A in beer-birch fermented dough by immunoassay]. Ochratoxin A (OTA) is a known mycotoxin, which is found in large quantities in foodstuffs and feedstuffs and is therefore a potential threat to public health. OTA is also produced by certain fungal species, including species of Aspergillus, Penicillium and other less frequent species, which are frequently present in brewing processes. The aim of this study was to determine whether the mycotoxin OTA is produced by a) fungi in the production of the birch beer-birch dough mixture and b) in the yeast dough prior to fermentation and/or in the brewing mash. Therefore, OTA was investigated in sourdough and beer-birch fermented dough samples as well as in beer extracts. The amount of OTA was determined using an immunoassay (Ochratoxin A, Certified BCR, Hach-Lifesciences, Düsseldorf, Germany). According to the obtained results, the production of OTA by fungi in the production of the birch beer-birch dough mixture could be excluded. The beer doughs, however, contained OTA. The most probable source of OTA is the malt grains. The amounts of OTA ranged from 0.5 to 3.5 ng/g, which is in the range of the OTA concentration which has already been determined in beer. For rough estimation, the content of OTA in a beer made with a 150 kg malt grain and a fermenter volume of 1000 l was calculated as 1.8 ng/l. The OTA content in beer mash samples was between 0.0005 and 0.01 ng/l. To confirm the presence of OTA in beer, further investigation is required.
