Pro users of the software will notice many of the same capabilities and power that are available in Photoshop on the Mac App Store. We expect this transition to be seamless, taking advantage of the new native GPU GPU APIs and Metal to deliver the most powerful capabilities. Adobe's focus will be on making Photoshop on the Mac App Store faster, more efficient, and more responsive. This will result in Adobe being able to deliver far more frequent updates to the software that will include brand new features and capabilities. We are working on the Mac App Store version of the software now and plan to turn it on to users beginning with version 15.1, which will be released sometime in 2019. It has been a challenge bringing the desktop and mobile Photoshop mobile/tablet apps to the Mac App Store. We hope to be able to share more details on this effort in the coming months. So I'm writing to encourage you as a long-time Macintosh user to consider how you might best work with these changes. There will be some adjustments and changes in the apps' user interface, which could require you to re-learn something. With that in mind, we created this quick tutorial to help help make sure you know how to work with the new features that are coming in upcoming updates of Photoshop. The app has been rebuilt to use the new native Software Rendering Engine (SRE) that is designed to allow the software to be rendered with Near-native quality (or even better) using GPU hardware acceleration. Photoshop will take advantage of the new feature to deliver the best possible overall design quality in terms of image fidelity, memory consumption, speed, and usability.
