The ADA this year reported that the rapid increase in non-perfusion will be driven by diabetes and hypertension, being the main causes of pre-retinal and intra-retinal new vessels (arterioles and venules) affecting the vision of about 11 million people in the US. "Over the last 10 years, we have seen the first generation of effective drugs for the treatment of type 2 diabetes and hypertension and by 2020, 1.5 million new cases of type 2 diabetes will be diagnosed in the US," said Thomas Ineichen, who led the study. "As the importance of these conditions increase, the number of people with retinal disorders related to diabetes, hypertension or other risk factors will also increase. However, the prevalence of diabetes in the US is still increasing and the number of people with pre-hypertension and pre-diabetes is also increasing. Also, the current sodium restriction in low-salt diets will also increase the rate of pre-hypertension and pre-diabetes. By 2020, more than 52 percent of the American population will be considered to be at risk of pre-hypertension and pre-diabetes," he said. According to the ADA, vision disorders affect both the eye and brain. Blindness and vision impairment affect nearly 11.9 million Americans and its cost to the United States is more than $500 billion annually. On a global basis, there are nearly 646 million people with diabetes, a disease that affects 20.8 million Americans. "The scientific community must work together to educate the public and policymakers about the need to raise awareness of RNP and
