My recommended workflow for Photoshop follows older overwhelming practices. During the bulk of the workflow, I use Photoshop at its full resolution of 72dpi, and only work at a higher resolution when duplicating or exporting. If I were to resize my canvas, I would do so using the Resize Canvas Tool, and always work at 72dpi or less. If I did need to use the Photoshop canvas at smaller sizes or other resolutions, then I would duplicate the image and move it around the canvas. I would then resize the duplicated image again using the Image Size dialog menu at the bottom of the image. If your workflow has changed and you no longer need all of these features, you have a few options. First of all, you can disable all the plugins. But that's a lot of work! Alternatively, work in a floating palette window, surrounded by an empty Photoshop interface. You don't need anything but your mouse and keyboard for creative work, and your palette window only shows you relevant information. You can download a palette floating window utility here. Despite some bad press, it is still not unlikely that you will get someone on the other side of great to tell you that Photoshop was replaced by PSD2 - that's the new file format that is replacing Photoshop based on the Open Document Format and XML. Some of the pros may argue that it's not that easy to port your work over at this time, and that it's not a perfect transition. Creating a PSD file is a process that can take a lot of time, as each layer can be saved separately. But the process is making sure that no errors occur, and that the textures that are used belong to the correct layer, and that the paths and other content that are created in Photoshop are actually playing well with the imported content. But for the most part, it sounds like a fairly painless transition. And it's certainly not going to be final, as we still have numerous files that have been designed by folks using legacy versions of Photoshop that are still not quite ready for a new world order.
